St. Bartholomew's Hospital Journal,

OCTOBER 14th, 1893.

"Æquam memento rebus in arduis
Servare mentem."—Horace, Book ii., Ode iii.

THE objects of the Journal are, FIRSTLY, to put on permanent record such clinical and other work as is done in this Hospital, which finds its way into no paper, but which is in itself invaluable to the student and practitioner. It will thus enable them to keep in touch with recent work and with the progress of the science and art of Medicine, Surgery, and Midwifery in the Hospital and School.

SECONDLY.—To promote and extend the feeling of esprit de corps among students, past and present, in their work, amusements, and matters of interest to them in daily life; to note their doings in Athletics, in Examinations, and by publishing Reports of Meetings, Social Gatherings, &c., to give non active members some idea of the means by which the name of this great Royal Hospital is being maintained, and so, by example, to rouse them into activity.

THIRDLY.—To record such clinical and other lectures as are now given, but never printed in any permanent form, and which many students are unable to attend whilst holding their various appointments.

FOURTHLY.—To give publicity to anything original in the way of articles, verse, or drawings, and to act as a means by which those who write may learn to perfect themselves in that art, before they plunge into literary work in a wider sphere in after life.

FIFTHLY.—To bind as much as possible the past with the present, and to keep up the interest of old students in the doings of those now at the Hospital.

It will be circulated among the students, past and present, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, being the Journal of the Hospital and the organ of the Amalgamated Clubs.

FOR twenty-eight years an annual volume, the St. Bartholomew's Hospital Reports, has been issued. As is well known, it contains original articles, reports of cases, abstracts of papers read before the Abernethian Society, statistical tables, &c. The objects of this Journal in no way clash with the Reports, for there is an enormous mass of material which never finds its way into either the Reports or any of the weekly or monthly medical papers. This particularly refers to the valuable clinical lectures and to the interesting and instructive cases which daily are seen in the wards and out-patient rooms, records of which are only to be found in the somewhat inaccessible ward note-books. But the Journal is not intended solely for the publication of purely professional matters, and so may be said to have a wider scope than the Reports. It will be a record not only of much of the work of the Hospital which otherwise would be in a large measure lost, except to the few, but also of social and other matters of general interest to the student, and thus it will supply what has for some time been felt to be a want.

It is only in recent years that attempt has been made to carry out the objects of this periodical. We understand that at some time in the seventies an endeavour was made to publish a monthly paper, but it appears to have been made in a half-hearted manner, and came to nothing. In 1885 an effort was made to maintain a serio-comic journal in manuscript, which, after running through six issues, like others
